STAFF REFLECTIONS

Chris Kreger, Director of Worship

Come and See

I just got back from a quick trip over the holidays and was reminded once again about one of the things I truly enjoy about travel - the experience of seeing a landscape, a person, or a place first hand. It is one thing to learn about someone from others but something entirely different to spend time with that person, see how they live, what they do.

In the Gospel from John this week, there are some challenging questions and interesting responses for our reflection. As John points out Jesus to his disciples, they immediately begin to follow Him. When someone you trust says you need to meet a person, you are more willing to do so.

I have often found that reflecting on the questions of Jesus in scripture can be a helpful way to pray. His first question, "What are you looking for?" gets right to the heart of things. He does not ask "Who are you looking for?" or "How can I help you?" This simple question seems like a good place for me to start in my conversations with Jesus as I move into the new year.

The disciples' response is the great traveler's question, "Where are you staying?" I imagine Jesus hearing their unspoken wish, I want to be where you are, see who you are, get to know who you are.

What a wonderful, simple invitation Jesus offers, "Come and see."

He does not turn anyone away who would wish to know Him better. As travelers know, however, it may involve moving out of our comfort zone or leaving some things behind.

My prayer for all of us is that we take up the invitation this year. Let us take the time to come and see where Jesus stays with us.
